

GEN. OROZCO KILLED IN FIGHT IN TEXAS

Had Crossed River With Other
Mexicans and Was Discovered.

RUNNING FIGHT FOLLOWS.

Civilians, Customs Officers and Cavalrymen Participate in the Battle.

El Paso, Texas, Aug. 31.—Government officials tonight said they had received reports confirming earlier rumors that Gen. Pascual Orozco, prominent Mexican military leader, during the last five years had been killed in a fight between Mexicans and an American posse. Civilians, customs officers and members of the Thirtieth United States Cavalry participated in the battle, which according to reports was fought in the mountains in Culberson county, Texas. After a raid on the Dick Love ranch yesterday, Orozco and four companions were pursued from the Sierra Blanca country into the foothills. Orozco died at dusk tonight.

Official reports of the shooting said four Mexicans besides Orozco were killed.

According to reports the raiders led by Orozco arrived at Love's ranch, near Sierra Blanca, yesterday and forced the cook to supply them with dinner. While they were eating Love and two cowboys were seen approaching. The Mexicans fled, pursued by Love and his men, who quickly collected a posse.

The running fight which ended when the last raider was killed lasted until dusk this evening.

Four bullet wounds were found in the body, positively identified, according to reports, as that of the Huerta general. At the home of Orozco's family here the report of his death could not be confirmed.

General Pascual Orozco was one of the first to join the forces of Francisco Madero when the latter organized his revolt against President Porfirio Diaz in 1910. He remained in the field throughout the revolution and when Madero became President accompanied him to Mexico City. As a result of a disagreement, however, over large sums of money Orozco alleged to be due him, he soon abandoned his allegiance to Madero and took to the Chihuahuan hills.

With the fall of Madero, Orozco joined the adherents of Huerta and became one of the most active of the latter's military chiefs. He was one of the nine federal generals at the battle of Ojinaga. The majority of the federal officers and over 4,000 men were interned in the United States after that disastrous defeat, but Orozco escaped and organized another command.

Thoroughly familiar with the border, he slipped in and out of Mexico apparently at will, although execution was the kindest fate he might expect if captured by the constitutionalists. He was equally successful in avoiding United States troops and federal officers. He is known to have lived for months near El Paso, but although a dozen expeditions were organized to capture him, he always received warning in time.

With Huerta's arrival in the United States Orozco joined his former chief and was arrested with him at Newman, N. M., last June by United States officials. After being released on bond he again escaped and since that time it is supposed he has been in the vicinity where he was killed.

Positively Identified.

Vanhorn, Texas, Aug. 31.—Bodies of the five Mexicans killed by a posse in the foothills late Monday were brought here today and placed in a morgue. A government official from El Paso has positively identified one of the bodies as that of General Pascual Orozco, Mexican revolutionary chief.

Thoughts for the Day.

Some day He will tell you why He has raised you, and let you look back upon your life story and see the golden thread of His fatherly love and care shining over and around it all, not as it is now, winding in and out, and only seen by glimpses.—Frances Ridley Ravergal.

Will Their Temperatures Rise?

Columbia State.

In South Carolina are about 180,000 white men, of whom about 120,000 will probably vote in the primary in 1916—more if more so desire.

Two or three or a dozen out of two or three dozen politicians, beginning now, by the skillful employment of accusations and abusive charges may raise the temperature of the voters four or five or fifteen or twenty degrees and raise themselves into office. They may arouse 40,000 or 50,000 men to a state of seething frenzy—to a point at which they will wish to fight somebody.

Yet there is only the slightest chance that a change of office-holders will take out a penny in the dollar of the average man's taxes.

The sole device by which we can run the government more cheaply and lower taxes is to tear down something—the Hospital for the Insane, for example, or some of the colleges, or the pension system.

No man with a family can live decently on the present salary of the governor—unless skimping in hospitality be regarded as decent.

The people of South Carolina can, if they wish, improve their schools, colleges, roads and charitable institutions by sustaining office-holders who try to do these things or, if they prefer, they can allow themselves to be "all hot up" by politicians who crave office.

Let us, however, be candid: If any man in South Carolina seeks the release of a kinsman or friend who is in the penitentiary by the righteous verdict of a jury or if he is interested in the conduct of a "blind tiger" or gambling saloon present conditions are highly unfavorable to his plans.

THE ENGLISH.

Fort Mill Times.

In Dickens' "A Child's History of England," written perhaps three-fourths of a century ago, there is a paragraph of peculiar interest. The English character of Dickens' time has undergone little if any change to the present day. What the great novelist and historian said of his fellow-countryman of the 19th century can be said of him with equal truth in the 20th century. We quote:

"It (the English-Saxon) has been the greatest character among the nations of the earth. Wherever the descendants of the Saxon race have gone, have sailed, or otherwise have made their way, even to the remotest regions of the world, they have been patient, persevering, never to be broken in spirit, never to be turned aside from enterprises on which they have resolved. In Europe, Asia, Africa, America, the whole world over; in the desert, in the forest, on the sea; scorched by a burning sun, or frozen by ice that never melts—the Saxon blood remains unchanged. Wherever the race goes, there law and industry and safety for life and property and all the great results of steady perseverance are certain to arise."

Now and then one hears some person possessed of more knavery than knowledge remark that the English are doing little to promote the cause of the allies in the great war in which nearly all of Europe is engaged. The losses of the English, running into the hundreds of thousands, belie the statement. Day by day the English are slowly but none the less certainly doing their part to overcome the Germans on the battle lines in Flanders and Belgium. In the great drive of the Teutons on Paris last September, did not the mere handful of King George's soldiers intercept and do even more than seemed possible for so few to do to halt the apparently irresistible rush of the German armies and drive them back beaten and broken over the road they had so lately victoriously traversed? Who, prithee, is bearing the brunt of the allies' campaign in the Dardanelles? Who has swept the high seas clean of German battleships and German commerce? Who, by and large, is furnishing the money to prosecute this war? These questions answer themselves.

But what we started out to say is this: If there is any racial pride most South Carolinians feel, or should feel, it is in the fact that in their veins run the same blood that has made the English people the torch-bearers of civilization, the one race that never has been more than momentarily beaten; in our veins is the same blood that is being so freely spilled on the battlefields of Europe that the God-given right of man to participate in his own worldly destiny shall not forever perish from the face of the old world. The Germans conquer the English? Never!

TYPES OF CRIMES.

Greenville News.

In its defense of the South against the vicious attack made by The Chicago Tribune, The State, of Columbia, makes an excellent point in its discrimination between kinds of crime. There are crimes, and there are other crimes. When the ignorant man goes astray he does that which is at once recognized. His action has not the insidious and sinister aspect which one notes about the crime of the intelligent man.

The crimes committed in the South, such as lynchings, which bring down the wrath of the self-appointed judges who sit in Northern editorial seats, are not so baleful as are those "refined" crimes perpetrated by men whose minds have been trained. They say the South is ignorant, and, therefore, they seem to heap the more opprobrium upon us. But which is worse, pray, for the man who has but little mental light to go astray, or for him who has cultivated his intellect to see it for all? There are crude examples of barbarity, and there is such a thing as exquisite barbarity. Between the two, we choose the former as the lesser evil. The former is the kind of barbarity which the Northern papers denounce as existing in the South; the latter is the kind of barbarity which enables the white slaver (the dirtiest and foulest of crooks) to ply his trade, and all the while maintain an air of respectability.

The man who sins crudely is the more of a publican; he who sins by circumlocution, who has many foils to show mankind that he is not sinning, is the pharisee, or the sardonic. Which is preferable? Which law-breaker, the crude, or the cunning is more dangerous to society? The former can be easily detected, and his type of crime can be checked; but the latter is hidden behind many veils, he works through others, thus polluting others, and the work which he does is not at once recognized, and its source is not immediately found.

It is quite true that there is more illiteracy, even among the whites of the South, than one will find in the North and West. This is deplorable. It is also quite true that the South has been cursed with full many a rotten politician, whose mere blarney would have denied him entrance to political office in states where illiteracy is practically unknown.

But those men, the writers, they who overthrow the courts of Georgia and of the United States in declaring Frank innocent, and in securing for him a temporary grant on life, those who forget to judge not lest they be judged, should remember that out of their "well ordered North," out of that same section whence they would have us believe all governmental virtue resides, there came forth a pack of human vultures, sanctioned and upheld by the government of the United States, who less than two generations ago got in their dirty work in the South, the effects of which work are not yet entirely extirpated. These same men threatened all that was good in the South, were the government men, those who and they planted here ideas which only generations can wipe out. They were sent by senators and representatives, who, even as the present day writers, judged from afar, having no accurate knowledge of conditions, and no appreciation of circumstances.

We all know that crime is not infrequent in the South, but there is none of us to admit that the conditions as suggested by out-of-South writers exist. Those articles are slanderous, and are conducive to factionalism, to hatred, one section for another and even to crime. Let each section care for its own crimes. Chicago has its crooks, so have all the big cities, and so have all the states. Let the people of other sections learn that they know their own condition, while we don't know it except in a general way; and that we know our own condition, while they know but little concerning it.

Yes, the South must blot out its illiteracy, and must run its rotten politicians into obscurity; but while doing this, let us avoid what other sections have suffered. Let us be watchful lest an exquisite barbarism spring up, such as is often found where men have brains, but not piety, education, but not religion.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh That Contain Mercury

As mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, sold by Dr. J. C. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Sold by Druggists. Price, 75c per bottle. Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

THE HIGHEST OFFICE.

Columbia Record.

Sometimes we think we favor woman's suffrage—and sometimes we are opposed to it. When we look at the polls and see the lords of creation who rule the land, we know that the average woman knows more about the needs of public life than the majority of the "electors."

But, then, why should woman wish everything? Why should she lower herself to man's sestate, to become no better than he?

It is woman's place to be revered, and the individual woman of the South is the highest type of her sex. The highest office in the world is woman's—the sacred office of motherhood.

In these heart breaking times of ours too many noble girls are forced by circumstances to go out into the world and earn a living. God of mercy bless and protect them. They know not the dangers that surround.

Some times we fear that woman is unkind to herself and unfair to man in accepting employment, for when she does she enters into competition in away with man—and she should demand man's wages. It is because woman works for less than man that some men are so ready to employ them.

It is one of the dangers that confront a working girl that she may by environment lose her natural sweetness and become a creature of artificiality, like the suave business man by whom she is employed. If you must, through circumstances, work to support yourself and loved ones, dear girl, go about your work singing, and never lose sight of the office to which you may honestly aspire, that of motherhood.

The haughty Roman matron was exhibiting her jewels to her less fortunate sister, when Cornelia, calling her children around her, said: "These are my jewels." That is the sweetest piece of philosophy ever written, for as Coleridge has so beautifully expressed it:

A mother is a mother still,
The holiest thing alive.

Riches, worldly face, what are these beside the possession of little ones whose love is richer than the gold of Ophir and more precious than all the jewels of King Solomon's temple; and to woman alone is given the office of motherhood, the right to bring souls into the world—for immortality!
